Dear Joshua:

Thanks for reading everything I sent you so carefully. I am particularly grateful for your first comment which I am going to try to work into something else I am writing right now. I share your obvious ambivalence about statistical responsibility. My treatment of it in the book of course was lifted just about completely from Waddington. I can also plead, though perhaps not very effectively, that a bit of overstressing is justifiable on the grounds that the notion is so unfamiliar to most people that it needs to be put in an exaggerated light in order to be seen at all.

Yours sincerely,
